Hello

"It gives me great joy to present this special edition of Youth Impact – Window to the Future. This magazine is more than a publication to me; it is the reflection of a journey I have been walking for many years in the social sector. Through our NGO and our work in the field of Corporate Social Responsibility, I have witnessed how change is possible when people come together with commitment and compassion.

My vision for this magazine comes from a deep belief that India's growth depends on the strength of its social systems, especially education, corporate decency, community support, and the opportunities we provide to those who need them most. Every initiative we take, whether small or large, becomes a part of a wider ecosystem that shapes the lives of communities across the country.

This Youth Impact edition holds a very special place in my heart. It highlights the immense power and promise of young people. Our youth are not just the future; they are the energy that moves society forward today. Their ideas, their courage, and their willingness to question the world around them are the driving force behind real transformation. Through this issue, we want to celebrate that spirit and show how young minds are contributing to education, innovation, inclusion, sustainability, and social progress.

My hope is that this edition inspires you to look at the world through the eyes of our youth and to understand how essential they are to building a more responsible, empathetic, and progressive India. May these pages encourage conversations, spark ideas, and remind us that meaningful change always begins with a single step."

Window
to the future

“Why Youth Impact Matters more than ever??”

The world is moving at a pace that no previous generation has experienced. Ideas appear in moments, movements form through social media, and innovations rise from the minds of young people who carry curiosity like a natural language. Window to the Future observes that the youth of today are not waiting to grow older in order to contribute. They are already shaping the conversations, solving the problems, and challenging the patterns that have stayed unchanged for far too long.

Across India, many young individuals are rewriting the meaning of social change. Their actions are born not from privilege or authority but from humanity and the desire to help. The magazine has witnessed stories of a seventeen year old teaching children under a streetlight, a nineteen year old designing an app to track menstrual health in rural areas, and college groups organising weekend food drives because hunger should not be a daily battle for any family.

These acts may appear small at first glance but together they form a powerful wave of youth led change. Their strength lies not in scale but in sincerity. Youth leadership stands apart not because of age but because of energy and the capacity to imagine a world that feels fairer and kinder. Youth do not accept phrases like this is how it has always been. They ask what can be done instead and they act on the answer.

In a country where one third of the population is under twenty five, the influence of youth is a national advantage. Progress happens when young minds challenge limits. Communities strengthen when young people take responsibility. Societies shift when youth believe their ideas matter.

Window to the Future recognises that this is not a phenomenon of the future. It is the present. Young changemakers are leading in classrooms, villages, community centres, and digital spaces with equal determination. They are reforming what social responsibility looks like and they are doing it with clarity and compassion.

This is the youth century and its story has already begun.

*"When
youth
rise, nations
rise."*

The First Ripples

2010

Students start forming small clubs in school's cleanliness drives, tree planting, tiny debates that felt huge. They didn't know it then, but a movement had begun.

2014

Cheap smartphones changed everything. Students now had access to knowledge, global trends, and stories of young leaders around the world. Volunteering suddenly went online and exploded.

Innovation on Campuses

2016

Hackathons, design challenges, college fairs suddenly, students are building apps, prototypes and projects instead of notes.

Something powerful is happening across India and it isn't coming from boardrooms or government offices.

It's happening in classrooms, in hostels, on rooftops, in WhatsApp groups, and on late night Google Docs filled with big dreams and bad formatting.

Students, 15, 18, 21 years old, are stepping into roles that used to belong only to "grown ups." They aren't waiting for a job title like "leader," "researcher," or "entrepreneur." They are becoming those things simply by starting.

A 16 year old organizes a street library. A group of college friends teach neighbourhood kids every Sunday. A young girl builds a menstrual hygiene project because "no one should miss school for this." A boy from a small town launches a nutrition drive that reaches hundreds.

These aren't isolated stories. They are hints of a bigger shift, a quiet revolution led by students who refuse to sit still.

What makes this generation different isn't that they know more. It's that they feel more, more urgency, more empathy, more responsibility. They are the first generation that grew up believing:

"My voice matters."
"My ideas matter."
"My actions matter right now."

Students openly discuss mental health, gender equality, climate anxiety, and social justice.

2020

When everything shut down, students opened relief channels: Teaching online, delivering food kits, assembling mask drives. Young people become frontline helpers.

India has more young people than any country in the world. But numbers alone don't make a movement intention does.

And today's students have it. They are designing solutions, persuading communities, correcting adults, and rewriting the idea of leadership itself.

This rise of student changemakers is not a future phenomenon.

It's happening, in real time, in real places, by real young people.

This isn't just India's youth power. It's India's youth responsibility and they're embracing it with both hands.

2022

Volunteering becomes skilled volunteering: Tech for good, STEM solutions, policy internships, research papers, community innovations. Youth impact becomes more professional and data-driven.

Purpose Meets Skill

The Youth Century Begins

2025

India recognises young people as co-creators of social change. Students now influence policy, lead grassroots projects, and build sustainable innovations.

THOUGHTS

Hamari Pahchan regularly invites these young learners to share their reflections, questions, and aspirations so the team can better understand their needs for building their identity, their pahchan.

These statements are more than simple feedback. They show that when a young mind is given the tools to dream, those dreams grow into unstoppable forces that can transform a life.

Aspirations

The Simple Needs of Giant Dreams

Sometimes the smallest necessity stands between a dedicated student and a massive ambition, such as becoming a police officer, a teacher, or an engineer. Their letters express not only academic challenges but also the logistical and social barriers they navigate every day. These voices remind readers that supporting their education extends far beyond textbooks. It includes removing every small obstacle that might slow their journey toward a brighter future. Hamari Pahchan remains committed to finding solutions that allow every ambitious student to focus on their studies with confidence.

Reflections

What I Learned Today

Many students share what they discover through the practical workshops offered by the organisation, including sessions on critical thinking, math tricks, and essential life skills.

From a Critical Thinker, Age Ten

The math problem game was difficult in the beginning, but when the teacher showed the trick, it felt as if my mind opened. I learned that a big problem is only a collection of small problems. Now I know I can solve them. Thank you for making learning feel powerful.

From an Aspiring Artist, Age Nine

My mother often told me to stay quiet, but in the life skills class I learned that my feelings matter. The Emotion Expression Game was the first time I felt safe to show that I was happy, sad, or even scared. Now I understand my friends better as well.

OBSERVATIONS

05 The Boy who built “Nutrition Mission”

Arth's Journey :

At just sixteen, Arth, a U.S.-based student with deep Indian roots, has emerged as a beacon of youthful humanitarianism, tackling one of India's most persistent challenges: hunger and malnutrition among children in urban slums. His initiative, Hunger to Hope, has steadily grown from a modest act of kindness into a structured program that is reshaping lives in Coolie Camp, Vasant Vihar, one of Delhi's most densely populated and under-resourced communities.

What began as a simple intention to give back has evolved into a daily nutrition initiative, serving 40–50 children with freshly prepared, dietitian-approved midday meals at one of the camps adopted by Hamari Pahchan NGO. These meals are not only wholesome but also strategically designed to combat protein and vitamin deficiencies, along with nutritional gaps that often hinder healthy growth in vulnerable children.

Since its inception, Hunger to Hope has mobilized over $10,000 in fundraising, financing more than 15,000 nutritious meals for underprivileged children. Looking forward, Arth envisions a women-managed community kitchen, which will not only ensure steady food provision but also generate employment and foster a sense of ownership within the community.

Education forms a vital pillar of his mission. Once every month, Arth conducts virtual nutrition and hygiene workshops via Zoom, connecting with families to emphasize the importance of balanced diets, clean water, and healthy living. These sessions supported by visual materials and local follow-ups have strengthened awareness among parents, ensuring that the lessons extend beyond the classroom.

Supported and actively assisted by Hamari Pahchan NGO, Arth's initiatives have been executed seamlessly, earning admiration from community members, volunteers, and school staff. The NGO's involvement has ensured logistical support, community engagement, and smooth coordination with local stakeholders. What truly sets this model apart is its structured approach and long-term vision. “It's not just a one-time donation. He's there every week, checking supplies, talking to the cooks, making sure no child goes home hungry,” says a local mentor from the NGO.

HUNGER TO HOPE

Beyond these daily interventions, Arth has expanded his efforts to include large-scale food and ration distribution drives. Over the past few months, he has personally spearheaded more than ten such initiatives, providing protein-rich grains, seasonal vegetables, hygiene kits, and essential supplies to families living below the poverty line. These efforts have directly benefited more than 500 individuals, underscoring the program's reach and reliability.

What sets Hunger to Hope apart is its consistency and accountability. Community members attest to Arth's weekly visits overseeing supplies, engaging with cooks, and ensuring that no child leaves school on an empty stomach. His dedication has cultivated trust and set a model of sustained engagement rather than one-off charity.

Looking ahead, with continued support from Hamari Pahchan NGO, Arth plans to scale this project across other Delhi slums, exploring strategic partnerships to enhance outreach and implement more structured nutrition programs for children and mothers.

Although raised in the United States, Arth's connection to India has remained profound. Frequent visits to his parents' homeland exposed him to the stark realities of hunger and poverty, leaving an indelible mark. Hunger to Hope became his way of leveraging his resources, education, and networks abroad to address urgent social challenges at home. In doing so, Arth exemplifies the transformative role of the global Indian diaspora in bridging resources across continents to foster sustainable development.

Crucially, his work aligns with the United Nations Sustainable Development Goal 2 (Zero Hunger), moving beyond immediate relief toward long-term solutions. His future roadmap includes expanding the program to other slum clusters in Delhi, developing structured nutrition programs for mothers and children, and undertaking comparative research between hunger relief models in India and the U.S. to adapt and replicate best practices.

As India continues to grapple with alarmingly high child malnutrition rates, Arth's initiative is a timely reminder that social transformation does not always begin in boardrooms or government offices; it can be ignited by the vision and determination of a single teenager. Hunger to Hope is more than a food program; it is a movement that nourishes bodies, empowers communities, and redefines what youth-led impact can achieve.

Movement for Transformation

Arth's work offers a compelling blueprint for community development, proving that true social transformation is ignited by a dedication to long-term solutions.

By focusing on both daily nutrition and educational workshops, the initiative addresses immediate needs while simultaneously fostering self-reliance and awareness. This holistic approach, driven by a teenage visionary, is redefining what youth-led impact can achieve, transforming a simple intention to give back into a powerful movement that nourishes communities and secures a healthier future for underprivileged children.

“It’s not just a one-time donation. He’s there every week, checking supplies, talking to the cooks, making sure no child goes home hungry.”

Hunger to Hope

Session at Coolie Camp of Joy

On the 7th of January 2025, the spirit of genuine care and development radiated from Coolie Camp. Hamari Pahchan organized Hunger to Hope, an initiative dedicated to the holistic well-being of the next generation, successfully reaching 50 children aged 9 to 15. This effort aligns perfectly with their core belief: that developing one's identity (Pahchan) begins with health and education.

Knowledge First: The Interactive Session

Thanks to the generous support and active presence of Arth and Avni Bhardwaj, the event was transformed from a simple food distribution into a powerful educational workshop. Before the meals, Arth and Avni led an engaging, interactive session focused on nutrition and healthy eating habits.

The children were highly receptive, participating enthusiastically in discussions about:

Essential Nutrients and their specific benefits for growth.

Practical Tips on how to incorporate nutritious food into daily life.

This focus ensured that the children left empowered with knowledge, not just satisfied bellies.

Smiles and Sustenance

Following the session, balanced meals (including Thaali Curry Rice, Chapati, and mixed veg Curry) were distributed. The overwhelming happiness and sincere gratitude expressed by the children were the clearest testament to the event's success and the immediate relief provided.

Lasting Impact and Gratitude

It provided immediate nourishment and empowered 50 young individuals with knowledge that will shape their health for years.

Their heartfelt thanks to Arth and Avni Bhardwaj for their invaluable contribution. Their dedication were the crucial ingredient that helped Hamari Pahchan deliver both hope and sustenance.

Young women transforming Rural Communities

Across India's rural landscapes, young women are stepping into leadership roles that were once unimaginable. They are not waiting for permission, not waiting for systems to change, they are changing them from within.

In villages where opportunities are often limited, these girls are challenging generational barriers with courage that feels both quiet and revolutionary. Some are running community classes under a banyan tree. Some are training other girls in digital literacy. Some are leading menstrual hygiene workshops, forming youth groups, or managing micro-initiatives like nutrition drives, waste management, tutoring younger children, or advocating for safe public spaces.

Their leadership doesn't always look like big speeches. Sometimes it looks like a 16-year-old teaching a 10-year-old multiplication, or a college girl convincing mothers to send their daughters to school. What makes their impact powerful is not scale, but intention. They lead from care, from lived experience, and from a clear belief: "If I rise, other girls will rise with me."

Rural India's future is being shaped quietly, in courtyards, classrooms, and self-help groups by girls who choose to stand up, speak up, and lift their communities with them.

Delhi Internships

This is where passion meets purpose

The internships offered through Hamari Pahchan are not simple assignments. They serve as direct lessons in humanity and leadership. When readers observe these moments closely, they will notice students sitting beside the community and choosing to listen first. The organisation believes that true impact begins with understanding rather than simply giving, and these students learn this in the most genuine way.

From coordinating essential supplies to using technology for remote support, every action captured here reflects the development of real world skill. These young interns are learning how to manage responsibilities, how to communicate with clarity, and most importantly, how to lead with empathy. These experiences extend far beyond a resume line.

WHY THEM?

Window to the Future observes that Hamari Pahchan works with a clear and unwavering philosophy. The organisation understands that genuine empowerment requires two essential elements. Access and application. Hamari Pahchan does not simply aim to educate. It aims to equip. Every effort is a pursuit of dignity, guided by the belief that circumstances should never confine a person's potential.

The Hamari Pahchan Value Proposition

The organisation is committed to building a permanent foundation for independence. This is how Hamari Pahchan transforms potential into power.

1. Holistic Skill Building

Hamari Pahchan designs programs that move far beyond basic academics. The organisation develops interventions that address critical gaps in knowledge, skill, and competence. These include digital literacy sessions, essential life skills, and vocational training that align with the needs of the modern workforce. Practical learning remains a priority so that each skill becomes job ready and relevant.

2. Dignity and Independence

Hamari Pahchan believes that when individuals gain practical knowledge and self belief, they gradually move beyond the limitations imposed by difficult circumstances. The organisation aims to nurture self reliance, ensuring that the impact created is not temporary but a lasting investment in a person's future. This work builds the conviction and courage needed for individuals to lead their own lives.

3. Measuring Real Change

The organisation focuses on sustainable improvement and result driven interventions. Success is measured not only through the number of people reached but through visible and meaningful positive changes in their lives, from gaining employment to initiating community led efforts.

Key Takeaway Callouts

Window to the Future highlights the core philosophy of Hamari Pahchan through these powerful callouts.

PRACTICAL KNOWLEDGE. PERMANENT CHANGE.
SKILLS AND TRAINING LEAD TO INDEPENDENCE.
BUILDING CONFIDENCE. CLOSING GAPS.
THE FOUNDATION FOR DIGNITY.

Drishti: Education for All

In a country as populous and diverse as India, the promise of Education for All remains both urgent and challenging. Millions of children still lack access to quality education or drop out before realizing their potential. In this landscape, campaigns like Drishti, run by Hamari Pahchan, play a critical role: not as replacements for governmental action, but as partners helping to close gaps.

Why “Education for All” is Still a Critical Cause? Despite constitutional mandates and massive public expenditure, implementation lags in reach, quality, retention, and equality. Under-resourced schools, insufficient infrastructure, lack of digital tools, and socioeconomic barriers all contribute to children being left behind.

Hamari Pahchan & the Drishti Initiative: Hamari Pahchan is a Delhi-based NGO founded in 2015. Its mission is to empower marginalized communities “to build their Pahchan (identity) with dignity and independence.” One of its flagship projects is Drishti: an education-centred campaign that aims at bridging the gap between privileged and underprivileged children.

“The journey of compassion invariably leads to true happiness.”

While many sympathize with the underprivileged, few take action to make a difference. My association with Hamari Pahchan allowed me to bridge that gap—gaining insights into the struggles of underprivileged women and contributing toward their empowerment.

As part of the initiative, I authored a write-up, organized a fundraiser, and designed a poster to raise awareness about the importance of providing women opportunities to learn, grow, and strengthen our economy.

I am grateful to Hamari Pahchan for this meaningful experience and look forward to contributing to similar initiatives in the future.

JHANVI KAPOOR

Intern at Hamari Pahchan

What Drishti Does: Goals, Activities, and Impact

Goals: Bridge the privilege gap; develop basic life skills (communication, character building); and improve quality through engagement.

Activities: Weekly remedial classes, distribution of textbooks & stationery, vocational training, and the “Gadgetshala” initiative (integration of digital tools to make learning interactive).

Impact So Far: Since its inception, Drishti has helped over 11,250 children with education access and supplementary support.

How Drishti Addresses Gaps, That Policy Alone Can't, NGOs like Drishti fulfil roles that policies often underperform in:

Personal Attention: Weekly classes and workshops fill the need for individual and remedial attention.

Material Support: Distributions reduce barriers caused by the cost of textbooks, stationery, or digital devices.

Life Skills: Workshops provide exposure to skills like basic computing or vocational training that academic literacy often overlooks.

Digital Inclusion: Gadgetshala addresses digital exclusion by providing tools and instruction where connectivity is often poor.

Conclusion: Education is the bedrock upon which individual dignity and national progress rest. Hamari Pahchan's Drishti campaign is a powerful example of how civil society can move the needle: by supplementing formal education with materials, attention, skill support, digital tools, and compassionate reach. Scaling with quality and sustained support is what will ultimately determine whether every child counts.

THE FUTURE OF VOLUNTEERING-

For decades, volunteering was often seen as a noble but separate activity something you did on the side, usually involving manual labor or simple fundraising. Similarly, Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) often felt like a formal, distant mechanism: a company writing a large cheque, or sponsoring a marathon once a year to look good.

But that era is over.

Today's youth the digital natives, the global citizens, the generation raised on climate action and social justice are demanding something far more genuine and hands-on. They aren't just looking for places to donate an hour; they're looking for opportunities to drive structural change. And in doing so, they are fundamentally redefining what CSR means for the world, and right here in Delhi with organizations like Hamari Pahchan.

First, What Exactly is CSR?

In simple, human terms, Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) is a business model where companies commit to operating ethically and contributing to social good. It goes beyond legal obligations. It's about a company consciously considering its impact on the planet, people, and communities.

Key Pillars of CSR often include:

Environmental Efforts: Reducing carbon footprints, sustainable practices.

Ethical Labour Practices: Fair wages, good working conditions.

Volunteering & Philanthropy: Donating money or time to causes.

The critical difference now? Youth are shifting CSR from philanthropy (simple giving) to partnership (active collaboration).

The Great Shift: From Transactional to Transformative

The traditional volunteer model was transactional: "I give my time, you get manual help." The modern youth-led model is transformative: "I bring my specific skills, I challenge your assumptions, and together, we create a scalable solution."

Young people today are not just painting walls; they are coding apps for NGOs, designing social media campaigns, consulting on supply chain ethics, and teaching digital literacy. They want their involvement to be a meaningful professional development experience, not just a feel-good chore.

This generation judges brands and employers not just by their products, but by their purpose. A company that allows a young marketing intern to spend paid time volunteering with Hamari Pahchan to design our new outreach strategy? That's true CSR, and that's what attracts and retains the best young talent.

The New Pillars of Impact

The youth volunteer movement is driving four key expectations that are now non-negotiable for effective CSR:

1. Skills-Based Giving: Pro Bono Power

The era of just manual labour is fading. Today's most impactful volunteer uses their professional skills like coding, design, strategy, or finance, to create scalable, systemic solutions for NGOs like Hamari Pahchan. This "Pro Bono" power multiplies the value of their time, offering organizations access to top-tier expertise.

2. Digital Natives: Transparency & Reach

This generation leverages technology to its fullest. They use social media for powerful advocacy, participate in virtual mentorship, and demand real-time impact tracking. Their digital fluency forces a higher degree of authenticity and transparency from both corporate partners and the causes they support.

3. Demand for Systemic Authenticity

Young people won't stand for "impact-washing." They require corporations to demonstrate genuine, systemic change across their entire operation, not just a one-off donation. For them, CSR must be integrated into the core business strategy, proving that the commitment is real and measurable.

4. Mutual Growth: A Shared Pahchan

Volunteering is no longer a one-way gift. It is an exchange where youth gain critical skills like leadership, resilience, and problem-solving essential for their careers. This mutual growth strengthens the collective identity (Hamari Pahchan), proving that serving the community is serving one's own future.

Corporate Voices

For years, the corporate world approached social responsibility as a side project a charitable obligation met with a cheque and a mandatory volunteering day. That era is over. Driven by market demands and an increasingly conscious generation of employees and consumers, C-Suite leaders now see a vital, strategic link between their own success and the powerful, fresh energy of youth impact.

When corporate executives discuss partnerships with NGOs like Hamari Pahchan, they are looking for more than just good optics; they are looking for shared value. They seek solutions that benefit the community while simultaneously advancing their core business goals.

The C-Suite Perspective: What Strategic Partnerships Gain

When companies connect their resources with the passion of young people, the result is exponential growth, both for the community and for the corporation itself.

1. Talent Attraction: The Purpose Dividend

The new workforce Millennials and Gen Z is purpose-driven. They actively seek employers whose values align with their own desire to create change.

Corporate Voice on Hiring: "Our research clearly shows that a strong, authentic CSR program influences over 50% of young professionals when choosing where to work. It's a powerful engine for talent retention because it turns a job into a mission."

By facilitating high impact volunteering, companies offer employees a chance to make a tangible difference, turning job satisfaction into deeper purpose. This engagement leads to motivated teams, lower absenteeism, and increased overall productivity.

2. Real-World Innovation: The Reverse Mentorship

The unique challenges faced by organizations like Hamari Pahchan require agility and resourcefulness. When corporate teams engage in skills-based volunteering using their expertise in IT, marketing, or strategy they are forced to apply their knowledge in a low-resource environment. This builds better employees.

Corporate Voice on Learning: "When our young analysts volunteer to build a data tracking system for an NGO, they aren't just coding they're learning efficiency and resourcefulness we can't teach in a boardroom. It's a kind of vital reverse mentorship in innovation."

Youth bring the passion; corporate structure brings the scale. For Hamari Pahchan to grow into a widespread movement, strategic CSR partnerships are crucial for amplifying our young change makers.

Here's where corporate resources create exponential growth:

1. Funding for Capacity

Effective CSR provides core capacity funding money for training, robust tech, or measurement systems not just project expenses. This institutional support gives Hamari Pahchan's youth leaders the foundation needed for long term growth.

Corporate Voice on Investment: "Supporting a group's core capacity is the only way to ensure the youth led model can be successfully replicated across multiple cities."

2. Governance and Trust

Corporations transfer their accountability mindset. They insist on clear metrics and transparent reporting, ensuring every volunteer hour is a measurable step toward global goals. This structure builds trust and ensures sustainability.

3. Leveraging Networks

A corporate partner instantly connects Hamari Pahchan to vital resources money cannot buy:

Logistics: Using distribution networks to reach underserved areas.

Mentorship: Pairing young leaders with senior executives for high level strategy.

Technology: Providing access to advanced platforms for better efficiency.

This transfer of operational efficiency is the true power of scaling.

A Call to Action for Corporate Leaders

By partnering with Hamari Pahchan, you make a direct, high return investment in your future workforce, your reputation, and community resilience.

Don't Just Donate. Partner for Scale

What We Are Building Today

The future does not arrive suddenly. It is built slowly, through small choices made every day. It is built in classrooms where curiosity is encouraged, in communities where voices are heard, and in spaces where young people are trusted with responsibility. When we talk about the future, we often imagine technology, careers, or success. But the real foundation of the future is people.

At Hamari Pahchan, the work is not about creating perfect outcomes. It is about creating possibility. The children and youth we work with are not waiting for change to happen to them. They are already part of it. When a child learns to speak with confidence, when a student understands their rights, when a young person starts believing that their background does not decide their future, something shifts quietly but powerfully.

What we are building today is not just skill or knowledge. We are building resilience. We are building dignity. We are building the idea that every individual matters, regardless of where they come from. Education here is not limited to books. It includes learning how to ask questions, how to work together, how to respect differences, and how to imagine a life beyond immediate struggles.

The future also depends on responsibility. Young people today are more aware of social issues than ever before, but awareness alone is not enough. It needs direction. It needs spaces where energy can turn into action. Through community work, student-led initiatives, and on-ground engagement, we see youth learning that change is not something distant or abstract. It begins locally, with real people and real problems.

This window to the future shows us something important. Progress is not always loud. Sometimes it looks like consistency. Sometimes it looks like showing up again and again. What we are building today may not always be visible immediately, but it is shaping a generation that knows empathy, accountability, and hope are not optional. They are essential.

A Letter from the Present to the Future

Dear Future,

We are writing to you from a time that is imperfect, uncertain, and still learning. We do not claim to have all the answers. There are gaps in systems, inequalities that persist, and challenges that feel overwhelming at times. But we want you to know this—we tried.

We tried to listen more closely to children who were often ignored. We tried to give young people opportunities instead of instructions. We tried to believe that potential exists everywhere, even when resources do not. Some days we succeeded, and some days we learned the hard way. Both mattered.

We hope that when you look back, you see that we chose care over convenience. That we invested in people, not just outcomes. That we understood education as a tool for confidence, not just employment. That we valued community, collaboration, and compassion, even when speed and numbers seemed easier.

If you are stronger, kinder, and more inclusive than we were, then our efforts were worth it. If young people in your time feel seen and heard, then this present did its job. We leave you with unfinished work, but also with belief. The belief that the future can be shaped consciously, thoughtfully, and together.

With hope,
The Present

POEMS

Binary Justice

The circuits hum a silent plea,
A coded cry for equity.
Zeros and ones, like night and day,
Yet shadows hide the disarray.

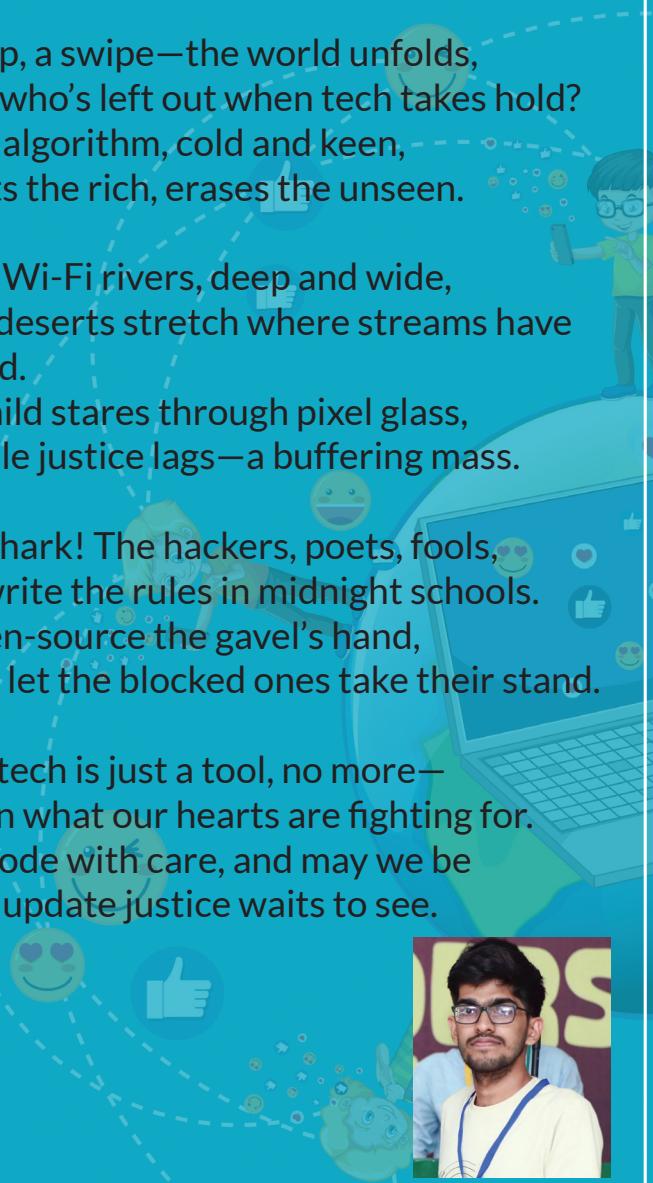

A tap, a swipe—the world unfolds,
But who's left out when tech takes hold?
The algorithm, cold and keen,
Sorts the rich, erases the unseen.

The Wi-Fi rivers, deep and wide,
Yet deserts stretch where streams have dried.
A child stares through pixel glass,
While justice lags—a buffering mass.

But hark! The hackers, poets, fools,
Rewrite the rules in midnight schools.
Open-source the gavel's hand,
And let the blocked ones take their stand.

For tech is just a tool, no more—
Than what our hearts are fighting for.
So code with care, and may we be
The update justice waits to see.

She Was Never the Curse

They called her a curse from the moment she breathed, a burden disguised as a daughter,
a mistake wrapped in soft skin,
never a soul allowed to simply exist.

Her worth reduced to beauty,
not the storms she held inside,
not the thoughts she carried quietly,
not the heart they never bothered to see.

If she stepped outside alone, she was wild,
if she stayed in, she was worthless,
every choice twisted against her,
every path lined with accusation.

When men stared with hungry eyes,
the blame fell on her shoulders,
as if his desire was her doing,
as if his sin belonged to her.

Kept from men her whole life,
yet handed to one at eighteen,
expected to trust a stranger's breath,
and call it duty, call it fate.

If she spoke, she was rude.
If she stayed quiet, she was wrong.
Her voice punished either way,
her silence never enough.

But she rose anyway, burning.
No curse. No burden. No apology.
If she can create life,
she can claim her own.

“Projects, internships, and volunteering, this is where your potential turns into power.”

The most valuable education is earned not from a textbook, but through hands-on action: internships, field projects, and dedicated volunteering.

1. Internships: The Professional Launchpad

Internships are the ultimate career test. They force youth to apply skills under professional deadlines, teaching workflow, communication, and business etiquette. For Hamari Pahchan, this is where potential leaders learn to execute like professionals.

2. Volunteering: The Heart of Service

Volunteering builds essential character. It is a masterclass in empathy, resilience, and complex social problem solving, skills critical for any career. Every hour given through Hamari Pahchan is a lesson in compassion and leadership.

3. Field Projects: Learning by Doing

Field projects are the crucible of practical problem solving. Managing hands-on assignments like running a health camp or a digital drive teaches accountability, budgeting, and collaboration with real-world stakes. This is where theory transforms into tangible impact.

The Hamari Pahchan Advantage

They embed these experiences into our their framework because they know experience is the new currency. They are not just educating students; they are creating a generation of resilient, skilled, and community focused leaders.

RESEARCH STUDENT GUIDE

What is Research?

Good research is the process of collecting information and evidence in an organized way to find reliable answers to specific questions. It turns simple ideas into verifiable facts.

Four Requirements for Quality Research

1. Clarity and Focus:

The research question must be narrow, specific, and answerable.

It defines a clear scope and objective for the study.

2. Credibility (Reliability and Validity):

Reliability: Means the study can be repeated by others with similar outcomes.

Validity: Ensures the study actually measures what it claims to measure.

3. Originality and Contribution:

The research must introduce a new perspective, a new dataset, or apply existing knowledge to a new context.

It must advance the overall understanding of the topic.

4. Ethical Responsibility:

Mandates respect for all participants, ensuring anonymity and informed consent.

Requires honest, unbiased reporting of all data and findings.

Importance

In the social sector, good research is the necessary foundation for real, lasting change.

Four Reasons of Importance

Replaces Intentions with Proof: It generates the hard evidence (metrics, data points, analysis) that proves a program or intervention is effective. This evidence is crucial for securing resources.

Drives Policy and Funding: Trusted findings influence strategic decisions by non-profits, corporate partners, and the government. Data helps shift resources toward solutions that are proven to work.

Empowers the Community: By gathering and sharing clear information about local needs and outcomes, research gives communities a strong, evidence-based voice for self-advocacy

Builds Personal Value (Pahchan): Conducting and publishing research demonstrates high-level critical thinking, analytical skills, and the ability to create new knowledge, which is invaluable for academic and career advancement.

RESEARCH #1

The Livelihood Launch: Investing in Dignity

Research on sustainable development consistently shows that the strongest and most transformative form of support is the kind that leads to long term economic independence. Window to the Future observes that Hamari Pahchan follows this principle with clarity. The organisation aims to move beyond temporary aid and instead help individuals build a lasting sense of identity, their pahchan, through self reliance.

The Street Vendor Project stands as a clear demonstration of this commitment. Hamari Pahchan recognises that people who face challenges, including those who are specially abled, require practical business tools to grow into confident and stable contributors to society.

Case Study: The Food Cart Opening Ceremony

This event, held on 14th November 2025 at Coolie Camp in Vasant Vihar, presented a strong example of the organisation's philosophy in action.

The Action

Hamari Pahchan provided a fully equipped food cart to a specially abled beneficiary. This act was not simply a donation of goods. It represented the donation of a complete and functional small business.

The Outcome

This effort immediately addressed three significant barriers to independence.

Capital

The beneficiary received the physical business asset, the food cart.

Stigma

The initiative publicly validated the individual as a respected small business owner.

Income

A steady and self managed source of income was established.

The emotional impact of the ceremony was equally meaningful. The presence of respected politician Mr Ashu Chauhan brought strong encouragement to the beneficiary and the wider community. This public acknowledgement strengthened belief in entrepreneurship and reinforced the idea that self determination can create a dignified and stable future.

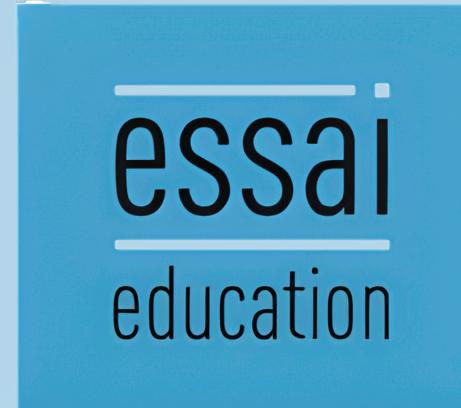

Partnerships for Progress: Education Support

Essai is not just a partner; they represent the gold standard in global educational consulting, guiding students to the world's top universities. Their involvement elevates our programs and offers unique benefits to both organizations:

The Essai Education Benefit For Essai, collaborating with Hamari Pahchan is a crucial part of their commitment to Impact Portfolio Building. They recognize that genuine, verifiable social work—like the focused projects at our NGO—is what truly differentiates an applicant for elite universities. By working with us, Essai provides its clients with:

High-Value Research Opportunities: Students conduct real-world research (e.g., assessing the Drishti curriculum effectiveness) that forms the core of a powerful academic portfolio.

Verifiable Impact: Essai's students gain measurable, credible experiences that are respected by international admissions committees, reinforcing Essai's reputation as the leading consultant that prepares students for success, both academically and ethically.

The ADOR Group Benefit (CSR Compliance & Strategic Giving): As a market leader, ADOR adheres to a high standard of corporate social responsibility, viewing it as an investment in a better society. Their partnership with Hamari Pahchan allows them to:

Fulfill Mandates: Strategically channel their CSR funds into high-impact, verified projects in areas they prioritize, such as education, healthcare, and women's livelihood.

Uplift Communities: Directly contribute to improving the Human Development Index (HDI) by focusing on empowering marginalized and underprivileged sections of society.

Align Values: Demonstrate their commitment to ethical and social practices, ensuring their legacy extends beyond business excellence into profound community impact.

Their strategic partnerships led by the analytical rigor of Essai and supported by the wide reach of Adore create a powerful ecosystem. This is how Hamari Pahchan ensures their educational programs are not only compassionate but also strategically superior and built for measurable, long-term success.

OLD AGE HOME VISIT

A DAY OF LEARNING AND CONNECTION

"A visit to an old age home is more than a social activity. It is a reminder of the value of time, companionship and empathy. Our youth volunteers and college students from Hamari Pahchan spent a full day with the elderly residents to understand their lives, their stories and the challenges they face every day. This visit was not just an experience. It became a lesson on kindness, patience and respect."

Our team went to the old age home with a simple aim. To sit with the residents, talk to them, share moments and make them feel heard. Many of them do not have family support. Some live away from their children. Most of them miss regular conversations and emotional warmth.

When the students entered the home, the atmosphere was quiet. Slowly, everything changed. Smiles started appearing. Stories began to flow. The residents welcomed the young visitors with open hearts. They were excited to talk about their past, their memories and their hopes.

The visit helped the students understand how loneliness affects older adults. They learned that the elderly do not always need material help.

WHAT THE STUDENTS EXPERIENCED

Conversations and Stories

The residents shared stories from their childhood their work life and the time when families lived together under one roof. The students listened with great interest. Many said it felt like talking to their own grandparents.

Learning About Loneliness

The visit made students aware of how isolation affects older people. The elderly spoke about how festivals evenings and meals feel empty without family. This made the volunteers understand the importance of spending time with them even if for a few hours.

Activities and Warm Moments

The team played indoor games sang old songs and even shared a small snack time. Laughter filled the room. Some residents held the students hands while talking. It showed how much human touch and presence matter.

Emotional Takeaway

The students left with mixed emotions. They felt happy to bring joy for a day but also sad about the everyday loneliness the residents experience. Many volunteers said they wish to come again. Some offered to visit during festivals so the residents do not feel left out.

WHY THIS VISIT MATTERS

- It builds a bridge between youth and the elderly
- It teaches young people empathy and gratitude
- It brings emotional comfort to older adults
- It encourages society to look at ageing with respect and care

CONCLUSION

The old age home visit reminded everyone that ageing is a natural part of life and every person deserves love and dignity. A single day spent with the residents created memories on both sides. The students returned with a deeper understanding of human values.

"Aaj bahut khushi hui beta, kisi ne itne pyaar se baat ki... dil halka sa ho gaya."

"Tum logon ko dekh ke yaad aaya ki zindagi kitni khoobsurat thi... aur ab bhi ho sakti hai."

"Bas yeh saath mil jaaye kabhi kabhi, toh hum jaise logon ko aur kya chahiye."

This moment from the old age home visit shows the heart of Hamari Pahchan's work. The intern sits with the elderly residents and listens to their stories with patience and genuine interest. The atmosphere is quiet yet full of warmth. The residents open up slowly sharing memories that still matter to them. The intern listens softly giving them the comfort of being heard and understood.

Hamari Pahchan encourages young people to spend time with older generations because these simple conversations create real learning. The interns discover how much wisdom and experience the seniors hold. They also see how much a little attention can brighten someone's day. The elderly feel valued again and the youth carry back lessons that shape their thinking and their way of seeing the world.

This picture reflects a gentle idea. The future becomes better when the young learn to care and the old feel respected. Moments like this remind society that kindness is powerful and human connection is the first step toward a more thoughtful future.

Collaboration with GMR Christmas Carnival

This December, the festive spirit came alive at GMR Aerocity's Christmas Carnival, held from the 24th to the 26th at The Square in Merry City. Amid twinkling lights and the cheerful buzz of families and friends, Hamari Pahchan NGO brought its own spark of creativity and warmth, turning simple moments into lasting memories.

In partnership with Sanssara Studio, Hamari Pahchan curated stalls that celebrated the joy of making and personal expression. Visitors of all ages explored DIY cups, handmade clips and accessories, and vibrant hair braiding. Names transformed into cherished keepsakes through customized gifts, shirts, and clothes, making every creation uniquely special.

Thanks to the opportunity provided by GMR Aerocity, Hamari Pahchan was able to showcase not just creativity, but the magic of participation and togetherness. The carnival was a space where imagination met community, and every small craft carried a story, a memory, a smile.

Amid the wider Merry City event, where many exhibitors added their own charm, Hamari Pahchan stood out for its focus on personal connection and creativity. Each thread, bead, and printed name was a testament to how thoughtful gestures can light up a festival with meaning.

For Hamari Pahchan, this collaboration was more than just a stall at a carnival. It was a window into the future of inclusive community experiences, a celebration of art and identity, and a reminder that giving people the space to create is itself a gift.

16 CHRISTMAS GLIMPSE

The Christmas Mela organised by Hamari Pahchan NGO on 20 December 2025 at Bhanwar Singh Camp, Vasant Vihar, was less about a festival and more about creating a shared moment of belonging. With over fifty children and families coming together, the space felt alive with curiosity, warmth, and honest joy. The team began by talking with the children about what Christmas means around the world, but the conversation quickly turned personal. Children spoke about their dreams, recited poems, and shared small stories about themselves. It was a reminder that celebration becomes meaningful only when people feel seen and heard.

The day unfolded gently, with care taken to ensure that no child felt left out. Children were guided in small groups and invited to write one goal for the coming year and one thing they felt grateful for. These handwritten notes were later tied to a Christmas tree, turning it into a quiet symbol of hope and intention. Laughter filled the space during the cake cutting, gift distribution, and dance performances. Alongside the fun, simple conversations about education, good habits, and staying away from harmful practices were woven in naturally, without preaching. A short motivational session by partner TajSATS encouraged the children to believe in themselves and stay committed to learning. Clothes and stationery were also shared, meeting practical needs while reinforcing a sense of care. By the end of the day, what remained was not just the memory of a celebration, but the feeling of being valued, supported, and hopeful about the future.

10 IMPACT BASED PORTFOLIO BUILDING FOR

Getting into a dream college is not only about scoring well. It is also about showing who you are and what you care about. Admissions teams want to see students who have done real work and created real impact beyond textbooks and examinations.

Window to the Future highlights how Hamari Pahchan helps students transform their energy and ideas into a strong and meaningful portfolio that colleges immediately recognise. The organisation guides young people in building a story rooted in purpose and action.

Why Your Portfolio Needs Impact

When a college admissions officer looks at an application, they review thousands of files filled with excellent grades. What separates one student from another is the evidence of experience.

Real World Skills

High marks show that a student can learn, but an internship shows that they can apply knowledge. The programs at Hamari Pahchan help students develop practical abilities such as project management, social media marketing, legal research, and writing. These are the skills that top colleges value deeply.

Proof of Passion

Contributing to a recognised NGO demonstrates that a student cares about something larger than themselves. It shows leadership, teamwork, and genuine commitment to a cause that matters.

The Letter that Matters

Letters of Recommendation from experienced NGO leaders carry significant weight when they are based on real work. They speak about completed projects and the positive change the student helped create, making them far stronger than general statements.

How Hamari Pahchan Helps Build a Student's Story

The organisation offers structured programs that turn simple volunteering into real professional experience. Students complete their journey with clear and verified evidence of their impact.

The Right Projects: Hamari Pahchan provides a wide range of project options so students can select what aligns with their interests and future goals.

Eklavya Program: A guided training program that spans four to six weeks. Students work on defined tasks, receive weekly mentorship, and create authentic projects that strengthen their portfolio.

Profile Building Internship: A flexible program focused fully on creating a professional portfolio. Students plan, execute, and document a complete project. The final report clearly demonstrates their achievements and offers colleges a detailed view of their abilities.

COLLEGE ADMISSIONS

Unlocking India's Safety Net (The DBT/DPT Initiative)

This major 18 month initiative, proudly led by the bright intern Aryan, addresses an important challenge faced by many communities. The project focuses on ensuring that eligible citizens receive the support available to them through Government DBT, Direct Benefit Transfer, and DPT, Development Policy and Training, schemes. Window to the Future notes that procedural barriers and limited awareness often prevent individuals from gaining access to essential social security, skill development opportunities, and livelihood support.

The Mission: Aryan, supported by the Hamari Pahchan team, will work to identify 100 beneficiaries. The organisation will host weekly DPT sessions, offer hands on documentation support, provide legal assistance, and monitor progress through careful and detailed surveys.

The Leader's Path: While Hamari Pahchan oversees the operational execution, Aryan receives full credit as the Project Lead. It is an example of how the organisation builds ethical leaders. The model offers real world accreditation, professional recognition, strong Letters of Recommendation, and applications for national awards.

This initiative, will lead by intern Jasmine from Step by Step School, is about much more than a game. It is a powerful social statement designed to shatter the outdated taboo that girls should not play football.

The Goal: Jasmine will teaching, inspiring, and empowering young girls to take to the field, fostering health, fitness, and life skills. For girls in underserved communities, playing sports freely is often discouraged by social restrictions and family fears. KickStart provides a safe, structured, and celebratory environment to overcome these barriers.

The Impact: Through football, these young women gain essential life lessons: teamwork, quick-thinking, patience, and companionship. These are the skills that build powerful individuals and break generational taboos. The initiative covers basic soccer skills, exercise, nutrition, and even foundational financial knowledge, giving these girls the tools to be active, healthy, and economically aware leaders in their own lives.

This is the future of change, led by the youth, for the community.
